TO DREAM IS TO BLEED A LITTLE

We all have dreams. Some are loud and ambitious, others are quiet and tucked away where no one can reach them. We daydream about who we could become, the life we wish we had, or a future that feels just a little out of reach. At night, those dreams return, sometimes as wild fantasies, sometimes as nightmares, and sometimes they don't show up at all. Just empty time, like silence in motion. But even when they're hard to explain, dreams are powerful. They pull us forward. They tell us, "Maybe things could be different." And that's where it begins, that little spark in the soul.

But the truth is, dreaming comes with a cost. Not always upfront, but always real. Because when we dream, we start to care. And when we care, we start to take risks. We risk disappointment, we risk loss, we risk facing a reality that doesn't match what we hoped for.

And when that reality hits, it doesn't always tap us on the shoulder. Sometimes it breaks in like a storm. Quiet plans fall apart. People disappear. The things we wanted crack under pressure. And suddenly, the dream feels like it betrayed us.

But maybe that's the price. Just like love can lead to grief, maybe dreaming leads us to the edge of reality, where the beautiful parts and the painful parts live side by side. To dream is to bleed a little. But it is also to feel, to try, to live, and that's what matters in the end, not whether the dream was perfect, but that we had one, that we dared to believe in something more. That we kept going even when it hurt.

We won't always win. We won't always get what we pictured, but we'll grow. And somewhere along the way, we'll understand - it's not just about dreaming, and it's not just about surviving. It is about bringing the two together - to dream boldly, to live bravely. That is where healing begins. That is where strength is found.

INNER VOICE

In tranquil seclusion, serenity's nest,
 Within hostel walls, my soul finds rest.
 Free from life's toxins, I'm reborn anew,
 Charting my course, with dreams shining through.

Distant echoes of joy, from loved ones' delight,
 A bittersweet refrain, on this solitary night.
 Yet in stillness, I discover my might,
 Weaving a life, where aspirations take flight.

Moonlit hours, with books as gentle friends,
 Knowledge's ember, that in my heart ascends.
 Long-held yearnings, now within grasping sight,
 I'm authoring my tale, with each passing light.

In this quietude, my heart finds its voice,
 A purpose unfolding, with each heartfelt choice.
 I'm sculpting my life, with every conscious stride,
 In this peaceful refuge, I'm finding my inner tide.

Topic : The Pressure to 'Have It All Together': A Myth Every Student Lives With

The pressure to 'have it all together': A myth every student lives with

As a student, I have often felt an invisible pressure to have my entire life planned out, to know exactly which career path I'm heading toward, to maintain a vibrant social life, to be emotionally strong, and to appear confident and composed. From conversations with family to casual remarks from peers and even social media posts, the message is clear: by a certain age, you should have it all together.

But here's the truth that many of us hesitate to admit — no one really has it all together. Life is messy, unpredictable, and full of twists and turns that no one can fully prepare us for. Yet, this pressure to appear perfect and certain remains a myth that traps many young people in anxiety and self-doubt. We are told to be productive every moment, to excel academically, to build strong networks, and to maintain a positive mental health balance all at the same time. But the reality is different. Life doesn't hand out a clear, easy roadmap. Growth is not linear. Sometimes we take one step forward and two steps back. Sometimes we get lost, and sometimes we find new paths we never imagined. And that's not only okay, it's normal.

Through my ongoing study in sociology, I have come to understand that our paths are shaped not only by our choices but also by the social and cultural forces around us. Expectations from family, traditions, economic situations, and peer influence all play a part in how we see ourselves and our futures. This awareness has helped me to be kinder to myself and others, knowing that everyone's journey is unique and often complicated. It's okay to pause and not know what comes next. It's okay to ask for help, to explore different interests, and to change directions. It's okay to be vulnerable and admit when we don't feel confident. In fact, these moments of uncertainty can be some of the most powerful. They push us to question what truly matters, to reflect deeply on who we want to become, and to grow in ways that certainty never could.

As students, we are not lost, we are explorers navigating a complex world. Each step, each mistake, each moment of doubt is part of the journey toward becoming the person we are meant to be.

So, to every fellow student who feels pressured to have a fixed plan, remember this: life is not a race or a test. It is a journey filled with learning, discovery, and endless possibilities. Allow yourself the grace to be human, and you might find that not having it all together is where the real growth begins.

Topic : Preparing Oneself for a Visionary Future

Published in Nagaland Post on 15th July 2025

Preparing oneself for a visionary future

"The future is not something we enter, but something we create- John Shoemaker

As students, we are often asked what we want to be when we grow up. Most of us say Doctors, Engineers, Scientists etc. Coming from a lower-middle-class family, respect is often the ultimate goal, which is understandable. But in pursuit of respect, we may chase the profession we don't truly have passion for, leading to personal dissatisfaction. Rarely are we asked, "What kind of world do we want to grow up in?". Growing up, I have envisioned a society that is respectful, sustainable and successful. However, I know the complexity of achieving this vision. I accept it is not that simple but we can still create one.

A beautiful world can be attained when society considers respect regardless of one's profession. We all know the phrase "Give respect and take respect", this should be our motto as citizens. It's time for us to take ownership of our future and envision a world that is just, equitable, and sustainable.

In the past, acquiring knowledge relied heavily on mentors. Today, information and knowledge are at our fingertips. Our future is heading into a diverse, unknown landscape. We must prepare for this uncertainty. By imagining a better future, let's identify challenges faced by our generation amidst the 4th industrial revolution, harnessing AI's vast potential. However, every positive outcome comes with a negative impact, which is distraction. Constant digital connectivity distracts us, often unconsciously, on Instagram, Facebook, Telegram, WhatsApp, etc.

To counter this, every youth and student should consider part-time jobs and side hustles, reducing dependence on parents for basic needs. Ironically, parents often discourage and suppose it to be a handicap for academics, but I believe we can diversify our time and invest in activities that could be odd but fruitful.

With the AI advancing rapidly, there's a risk to careers. Let us be vigilant in choosing what we are preparing for. Some may think the AI replacement will take time. But if we look decades ago, sending information required visiting telephone stations kilometres away. Today, we share information in seconds. Every union is doing their own part to be a favourable "incubator" for students to grow. This is imprinting a permanent sense of community in every individual. However, many students cite societal prejudices as a barrier to growth.

The fact is that society's nature won't change but we can. All we do is build a strong mindset to ignore ignorance. There is no glory, no story out of comfort. Fear is what keeps us tied inside a hard shell. Fear of failing, fear of not becoming the one we have imagined. Fear of prejudices, fear of observation. If you are not ready to be uncomfortable, you are not ready to grow.

Preparing for the future means diversifying our knowledge and focusing on skills and interests that can positively impact our community. That can ultimately bring a positive impact on our community. From Technical Skills like Artificial Intelligence (AI) and Machine Learning (ML), Cybersecurity, Blockchain Technology, D Printing, etc., to soft Skills like Creativity and Innovation, Critical Thinking and Problem-Solving, Emotional Intelligence, Leadership, Time Management, Productivity etc.

With a motive for Sustainability, Social Responsibility, Mental Health, Social Impact, Innovation, Entrepreneurship etc. By building these skills, we emphasise a sustainable future, draw inspiration from Civil Service aspirants whom we deeply respect and learn from. Their resilience and determination in tackling these exams even after setbacks are a huge motivation.

In conclusion, 'Preparing Oneself for a Visionary Future' is our chance to shape the future we want.

As we move forward, let us continually ask ourselves: "What role will I play in society as a provider or recipient, producer or consumer?" We must learn to see failure as an opportunity for growth, rather than a setback. With advanced learning, overcoming fear and embracing failure as a learning process can have a transformative effect on both our personal growth and our community.

Let us be an inspiration for future generations. Remember, "Think big, start small, and don't quit."

Topic : Hustle Culture Forgot We're Human

Published in Nagaland Post on 31st July 2025

www.moderncollege.edu.in

Hustle culture forgot we're human

We live in a time where rest feels suspicious, where slowing down feels like failure, and where "busy" has become the new status symbol. It's as if we've been conditioned to believe that our value lies solely in how much we can produce, how fast we can move, and how long we can keep going without burning out. In this culture of constant hustle, we're told to do more, be more, prove more - always chasing the next milestone, the next upgrade, the next version of ourselves. But somewhere in the middle of all this striving, we've quietly lost sight of something essential: we are not machines.

We are people - with limits, with needs, with messy thoughts, tired eyes and soft hearts that can only take so much. Not every hour of our day is meant to be optimised. Not every interest needs to become a side hustle. Not every moment of rest requires an excuse. Sometimes, success doesn't look like a trophy or a promotion or a neatly colour-coded planner; sometimes, it looks like managing to get out of bed even when everything feels heavy. Sometimes it's laughing with a friend between responsibilities, or it's simply allowing yourself to do nothing, and not feeling guilty about it.

This isn't an argument against ambition, nor is it a rejection of discipline or growth. It's a reminder that we are allowed to exist outside of our output - that our worth doesn't evaporate just because we paused. Hustle culture rarely makes space for humanity. It doesn't ask how we're feeling. It doesn't care if we're exhausted. And it certainly doesn't wait for us to catch our breath. But being human - fully, honestly, and gently - might be the very thing that keeps us grounded when the world demands too much.

As a student, I've felt this pressure firsthand - the kind that quietly tells you that taking a break means falling behind. There's this constant hum in the background saying, "You should be doing more." But the more I chase perfection, the more I lose the joy in learning, the meaning behind why I started in the first place. I'm learning - slowly - that it's okay to take breaks, to be tired, to not have it all figured out. I'm learning that being human is not a flaw in the system. And there you have it - the crux of the matter.
