Hello Everyone,
As I sit down to write this message for "Apprise 2026", our annual magazine, I realise that another year has flown by. A year filled with events, special moments, milestones and new developments for our institution! So many beautiful memories, so many shared experiences for our students, faculty and staff.

Our campus has now moved beyond the start-up phase and is progressing and growing steadily towards its potential. The focus is still going to be a mixture of building new facilities while simultaneously improving the quality of the existing infrastructure. Our college location is a unique proposition. It is nestled away from crowded spaces and urban areas, bringing a calm and peaceful environment. There is space, greenery and breathing room, literally speaking. On the other hand, it is not as easy to commute, and we have challenges with the highway during the monsoons. We are grateful to all the ideas and suggestions that we receive from students and faculty for making our daily experience better.

I look back fondly at the successful conduct of our Modern Week 2026 in February this year. It was a fun filled and exciting week which was kicked off on a high note with the Open 10K Mini Marathon. Other combined events such as the Literary Day, Cultural Day and Sports Meet have made this a special celebration for all of us. It was wonderful how Modern Family (students, faculty, non-teaching staff) participated and made this a memorable experience. I hope to see more of these in the coming years.

Thank you to our editorial team for bringing together all the articles, photos and contributions. It brings us closer to each other, learn new things and offers a unique perspective that we sometimes miss.

We are near the half-way mark in 2026 and I wish all of you a wonderful rest of the year!

Greetings!
As we complete another Academic Session with the first batch of students who enrolled in Piphema Campus graduating– it simply reminds us how time flies.

Campus Development is measured by the construction that our Operations Team carry out every day round the year. This Academic Session 2025-26, we have witnessed the following developments:

- Installation of our Campus Gate.
- 2nd phase of the campus road concrete construction connecting the hostels and the football ground.
- Completing the football ground.

We are grateful to HiKOKI Power Tools India Private Limited again for the CSR support of the 2nd phase and the Alumni Association (MCAA) for the Football Ground support.

We are also planning to add more sports infrastructure and seeking support from Nagaland Cricket Association (NCA) to set up a Concrete Cricket Practice Pitch. All these are undertaken to ensure that every student's interest is taken care of.

As we complete the Green Audit, the Academic & Administrative Audit (AAA)- it renews our commitment for Environmental Initiatives and Quality in Education.

Also, as we complete another year of exhilarating Modern Week with every year getting better and with the new Academic Session 2026-27 in sight– we hope to engage more Students Exchange program, National Integration Tour (NIT), Educational Tours, Internships to help our students get a first-hand experience and exposure to different cultures, people, food habits and work experiences.

The Open Mic in the Academic Lawn is something we look forward to and we hope it gets better.

The monthly "Positive Link", the Alumni engagement talks and the Newspaper articles are such a pleasure to read, listen and I look forward to another year of "Apprise" Publication.

Lastly, I want to wish all our students the best in their semester exam and the Graduating batch the best that Life can offer!

Message

Greetings Everyone!
The session 2025-26 has been an eventful year with numerous activities both academically and extracurricular wise. It is always a joy to turn the pages of "Apprise" to revisit and relive those moments. This year, in particular, should be remembered for the 25th year of Modern College EU, a milestone for those who have been a part of the EU over the years and equally for the college. I must, also, commend the teachers, staff and students for their efforts in successfully letting the college complete the AAA assessment this year. It shows how all of us take the importance of quality in education and how we can all work together in continuously improving it.

Kudos to the Literary team for always bringing out fresh editions of "Positive Link" every month. The contributions from the students prove how much it is loved and well received by everyone within and outside the college. I hope in coming years it gets even better setting the bar high for any college publication.

Congratulations to the Editorial Team for coming up with another great edition of "Apprise 2026". I look forward to reading it and hope everyone who receives it does the same and acknowledge the effort of the team.

Message

This academic session has once again been a year of blessings. The collective journey of our students and staff reflects growth, creativity, and a shared commitment to building our college in a unique way towards True Education. From academic achievements to extracurricular activities, all stakeholders have contributed in one way or another to shaping the institution and giving back to the community.

The academic achievements of 2025 has been remarkable and excellent, with 6 University Toppers, including 4 Gold medalists and 2 other Top Rank holders. The relentless efforts of both students and teachers have borne fruit with outstanding results. Our students have demonstrated dedication, humility, and discipline, and continue to show a willingness to learn, expand their horizons, and develop their knowledge and skills. As the saying goes, "Success comes to those who work hard and stays with those who do not rest on the laurels of the past." I extend my sincere appreciation to the Batch of 2025 for their hard work and for bringing laurels to the college.

In our pursuit of excellence and true education, extracurricular activities have played a vital role alongside academic accomplishments. From Autumn Fiesta and Modern Week to various initiatives led by NCC, NSS, RRC, the Eco-Green Club, academic departments, and other clubs, these activities have enriched students' life. I commend the relentless efforts of our teachers and office staff for their selfless dedication in bringing out the best in every student. The continued support of our parent community and Alumni Association has also been a guiding force in the growth of our institution.

The annual magazine, "Apprise" is a significant milestone for our college, marking progress and giving life to our ideas and aspirations. I congratulate the Literary and Cultural Committee for their hard work and dedication in bringing out "Apprise 2026". ## Kharu

It stood desolate, lonely, and still
At the quiet corner of a hill,
Adorned with intricate carvings,
Welcoming me with its markings.
And so I ask, "Who are you?"
It replied, "I am Kharu."
A weary observer here, lend an ear—
Archaic in the digital age, dear;
Yet, I carry the prestige of the past.
A legacy that is unsurpassed.
Discover me in books, legends, archive,
Mores, and museums where I survive.
Obsolete, still painting the rich culture,
Today, I stand as a symbolic structure.

Morung

The morung stood before the village
Before time learned to move fast.
Smoke darkened its walls,
And stories lived there without paper:

Boys learned strength by listening,
And courage by waiting their turn.
Girls learned wisdom nearby
Through song, work, and shared memory.
Firelight taught what books could not.

Today it stands quiet
Yet the wood remembers.
Some places do not disappear—
They wait.

Dual Realities

Neiko is eighty years old and lives with her daughter Ketou's family. Every evening, she sits in a wooden rocking chair on the west-facing back porch of their small one-storey cottage, which aligns directly with the sunset.

One evening, as she waits for the sun to sink between the valleys, she sees her nine-year-old granddaughter, Rhinuo, trying to capture the sunset on her mother's phone. The sight of Rhinuo makes Neiko's thoughts drift back to her own childhood. She remembers playing with small pebbles and St. Thomas beans, holding them up to the sky to block the sun or measure its size. The memory reminds her of how much times have changed, and nostalgia settles in like the evening mist. Seventy years ago, children would have been playing in the mud or fetching water with their older siblings as they waited for their parents to return from the fields. She is amazed by the changes she witnesses in this new reality, so different from the life she once knew.

The sound of a grinding machine from the kitchen pulls her back to the present. She walks inside to find her daughter, Ketou, grinding glutinous rice. Neiko insists that she use the traditional wooden pestle and mortar, believing that the food tastes better that way and hoping her daughter will keep the tradition alive by using old tools and following ancestral methods.

Neiko grew up planting and harvesting crops according to the lunar cycle, while her daughter's family now relies on scientific weather forecasts, hydroponics, and aeroponics to grow their food. She is astonished by this new reality where machines and scientific tools reign. Though she feels blessed to witness these changes, she misses the old reality where people worked with their hands and derived satisfaction and joy from their labour.

Neiko is particularly shocked when she hears that a distant relative's niece married a man she met on social media. Her daughter then tells her that she sent money to the newlyweds as a gift through her phone. Neiko can hardly believe what she hears. She feels distant and disconnected, yet somehow learns to adapt.

At dinner, Rhinuo eats with a fork and spoon while Neiko watches silently. Once again, she is surprised by modern lifestyles and technological advancements that were unheard of during her childhood.

After dinner, Neiko sits beside the hearth, holding Kevi's digital voice recorder close to her mouth. Kevi, her son-in-law—an archaeologist and researcher—has shown her how to record stories as if they were artefacts. Neiko worries that her grandchildren might forget their history. Determined to preserve it, she records stories, folk songs, and memories using the digital recorder.

As she records the steps and instructions for weaving Lohe—a shawl worn by Angami male members—Rhinuo comes rushing to her, holding a tablet that emits an eerie sound. "This is the video of Thevüdzunuo's story that I created using AI," she says excitedly. Neiko's eyes widen in disbelief.

Just the previous week, Neiko had narrated the story of Thevüdzunuo—an egg that sets out to avenge her mother hen, who was killed by a fox.

Neiko learns something new every day—changes that either help people or make them lazier. In the past, warriors were admired; now, recognition and success belong to men and women of different pursuits. Her new reality stands in stark contrast to the old one, and this contrast defines her daily life. She understands that today's youth are burdened by academic pressure and uncertainty, where every worldly gain seems to come at the cost of cultural loss.

Neiko believes that we must adapt to change, but not become fully immersed in it—lest we become enslaved by technology.

A TAPESTRY OF LOVE

Nayuma stepped out of the bus in Dhawan, Nepal, the dusty road and the familiar scent of her grandparents' village enveloping her like a warm hug. The swaying palm trees and the distant hills welcomed her back to her roots. She had just turned twenty, and this trip was a much-needed break from the hustle and bustle of city life in India. Originally from Nepal, Nayuma had migrated to India for her studies. During her vacations, she usually visited her grandparents' home. She entered the old wooden house, where the creaking floors and rustic décor made her feel as though she had been transported to a different era. The air inside was thick with memories—her grandpa's laughter, her grandma's gentle scolding, and the aroma of traditional Nepali cuisine wafting from the kitchen. It felt as though she had travelled back in time.

As she entered her grandparents' room, she saw her grandmother's traditional 'Rai' attire, carefully preserved like a treasure. The worn fabric and intricate patterns told stories of love, culture, and identity. Though the attire was decades old, it still carried a gentle elegance. It consisted of a red-and-black ensemble adorned with silver ornaments and intricate embroidery. Nayuma's eyes sparkled as memories flooded back—how her grandmother wove magic into fabric, how she spent hours playing with leftover yarn while watching the loom come alive with beautiful patterns. Her grandmother would sing softly, her voice weaving stories of ancestors, tradition, culture, and heritage. The attire was more than just a dress; it was a symbol of their bond—a tangible connection to her culture. Nayuma recalled how, as a child, she helped her grandmother collect wildflowers to dye the threads, the scent of petals and earth lingering in her hair. The attire was woven not only with thread but also with her grandmother's love, guiding hands, and lessons in the ancient art of weaving.

Days passed, and when she returned to her college dormitory, she could not stop thinking about the attire. Its gentle whisper lingered in her thoughts. She decided to wear it on her college Cultural Day, showcasing her heritage with pride and honour. She redesigned it with a subtle modern touch, blending tradition with contemporary style. On the day of the event, as she walked across the stage, all eyes were on her, gazing in awe and admiration. She carried her culture with pride and confidence. She received heartfelt applause and admiration for her attire.

That day, Nayuma realized that sometimes the old ways are the most beautiful. She carefully preserved the attire passed down from her grandmother, keeping it in her room like a treasure. The garment, woven with her grandmother's love, would one day be passed down to her daughter—not just as clothing, but as a legacy of tradition, artistry, and love. Even now, she treasures the attire, for it reminds her of the warm, enduring love of her grandmother.

The Silent Lessons OF COLLEGE LIFE

Mr. Haotinlun Singson

B.A. 6th Semester | Department of Sociology

If attendance could be converted into marks, many of us would probably be rank holders by now. But college, as it turns out, had a very different syllabus in mind.

College is often described as the best time of one's life. People speak of freedom, friendships, and unforgettable memories. Yet beyond the visible moments—the laughter in corridors, crowded classrooms, and excitement of events—there exists a quieter side of college life: one that teaches lessons no textbook ever could.

When I first stepped into Modern College, I believed education would be limited to classrooms, lectures, and examinations. I thought success simply meant passing papers and earning a degree. However, as time passed, I began to realise that the most valuable lessons were never written on the board. They were learned silently through experiences that shaped me in ways I had never expected.

Coming from a middle-class background, college was never just a phase of life—it was an opportunity filled with responsibility. Every step felt important, and every decision carried weight. There were days of confidence, but there were also moments of quiet struggle. At times, I had to stand outside the office, not out of choice but out of necessity—learning how to speak, explain, and sometimes accept difficult realities. Those moments, though uncomfortable, taught me humility, patience, and resilience. One of the most significant memories of my journey was being a part of the National Cadet Corps. Wearing the uniform was not merely about appearance; it represented discipline, responsibility, and leadership. It taught me how to remain firm under pressure, lead with confidence, and work as part of a team. NCC was not just an activity—it became a foundation that shaped my character and strengthened my mindset. College, in its own quiet way, teaches independence. It is where we begin taking responsibility for our actions without constant guidance. We learn to manage time, handle pressure, and face the consequences of our choices. At times, we fail—and through those failures, we grow.

It also teaches us about relationships. We meet people from different backgrounds and perspectives. Some become an important part of our lives, while others simply pass through. Through these connections, we learn trust, understanding, and sometimes even the pain of letting go. Not every bond lasts, but every interaction leaves behind a lesson.

As the final days of college approach, the learning does not stop—in fact, it deepens. A different kind of awareness comes with knowing that this chapter of life is nearing its end. We begin to value the little things: familiar faces, daily routines, and places we once overlooked. We realise how much we have changed—not through dramatic transformations, but through small and consistent growth.

There are also moments of reflection—looking back at who we once were and who we have become. The fears we carried, the challenges we overcame, and the strength we built along the way make us realise that college was never only preparing us for examinations, but for life itself.

Now, as I stand at the edge of leaving this chapter behind, I understand that the most valuable lessons were never spoken loudly. They were found in silence—in struggles, responsibilities, discipline, and growth. One day, we will all move forward on different paths, carrying different dreams. The classrooms will become memories, and the routines will slowly fade. Yet the lessons we learned here—the patience, resilience, courage, and strength—will remain with us forever.

And perhaps that is the most powerful truth of all: that in the process of trying to find our way, amid ordinary days and quiet struggles, we were slowly becoming the people we were meant to be.

I would like to express my heartfelt gratitude to all my teachers, mentors, and especially my HOD, Ma'am Ruth, for their guidance, support, and encouragement throughout this journey.

Where It All Began & Ended Too Soon

Ms. Ketouseno Vielie

B.A. 6th Semester | Department of Political Science

There is something deeply beautiful about the last days of college. The same classrooms, the same corridors, and the same people suddenly feel different. The final period bell no longer signals only the end of a class; it echoes like a quiet goodbye to a chapter of life we never realised we were already leaving behind.

College was never just about lectures and notes. It was about the people who made every ordinary day unforgettable. With them, mornings started too early, laughter lasted too long, and even the simplest moments became memories worth holding onto. From sitting in class pretending to listen, to exchanging glances that said everything without a single word—these were the moments that shaped us more than any syllabus ever could. Even the teachers, whether strict or unexpectedly friendly, became part of the rhythm we grew accustomed to. There were plans made for the future—some fulfilled, others changed along the way. There were relationships that evolved, paused, or took different directions, yet still carried meaning. Because college is not only a place where you learn subjects; it is where you learn about people, emotions, and yourself.

The Department of Political Science taught me how to think, not just what to think. Between debates, laughter, and those “serious but not-so-serious” classes, the Department became more than just an academic space. It became a place where I discovered a part of myself I never knew existed. And I will always remember Sir Shahilo’s wise words, “Don’t take it otherwise,” whenever life becomes a little difficult.

To my two best friends—you have both been my constant through everything: the calm I needed and the chaos I could never escape. You were never just friends; you were my safe place, my greatest support, and the best part of my college life.

To my “opposition party,” we may have been called the opposition, but honestly, we were the main event wherever we went. From side comments to inside jokes, from unplanned chaos to perfectly timed reactions, we made every moment louder, funnier, and unforgettable. We did not just survive college—we made it entertaining. No matter where life takes us, this “party” will always remain one of my favourite chapters.

To my classmates, we began as unfamiliar faces and slowly became people who shared notes, laughs, stress, and countless memories. Not everyone was close, but everyone became part of the journey. From last-minute assignments to those random classroom moments that made no sense yet meant everything, being part of this class is an experience I will always carry with me. To my juniors, make the most of every moment you have here. It may seem long now, but trust me—it passes by faster than you realise. Laugh more, stress a little less, and never hold yourself back from creating memories. One day, you will sit where we are now, wishing for just one more ordinary day in college. So live every moment fully while you can.

And now, as it all comes to an end, there is a quiet realisation: we were living “the good days” all along. The very days we will one day look back on and wish we could relive, even for a moment.

And with that, this chapter comes to a close—not with perfect goodbyes, but with memories that will remain forever. We came as students, and we leave with friendships, laughs, and stories that will live far beyond these walls. This is not just a goodbye; it is a heartfelt thank you for everything.

Thank you, Modern College, for the countless memories I will always hold close to my heart.

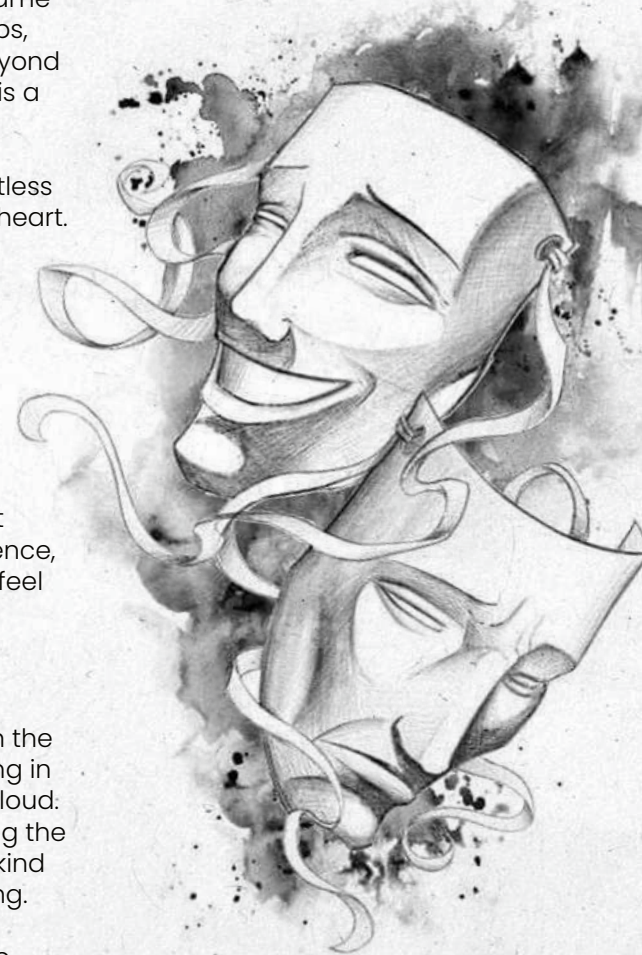

I laugh a lot.
Like... a lot.
In class, in the hostel, in the corridors—basically anywhere there are people. Sometimes the laughter is genuine, but most of the time, it is there to fill the silence, avoid questions, and make everything feel lighter than it actually is.

Because silence is scary.

The moment things go quiet—like when the hostel lights are off and everyone is lying in their own beds—my thoughts become loud. Too loud. And I do not like that. So during the day, I make sure there is always some kind of noise: my voice, my laughter, anything.

And people? They just assume I am fine.

“You’re always so chill, yaar.”
“I wish I could be this carefree.”
I just smile, because explaining it would be complicated.

College life looks fun from the outside—friends, classes, random jokes—and yes, sometimes it really is. Those moments when you laugh so hard your stomach hurts are honestly my favourite.

But no one really talks about the other side.

The part where you suddenly feel out of place in a room full of people you know.

The part where one small thing—a class test, a comment, or even a random thought—can ruin your entire mood.

The part where you unexpectedly start missing home, even because of something as small as food not tasting the same.
And you do not say anything.

Because everyone else seems fine. Everyone else appears to be adjusting. So you convince yourself that you should be fine too. There are nights in the hostel when everything becomes quiet. No laughter, no chaos—just the sound of ceiling fans and maybe distant voices from another room. And in that silence, everything I ignored during the day comes rushing back. Overthinking. Stress. That strange, heavy feeling I cannot properly explain. I pick up my phone, scroll for no reason, switch between apps, put it down, then pick it up again—just trying to distract myself from my own thoughts.

And sometimes, I simply stare at the ceiling and wonder: “Why does this feel so overwhelming when nothing is actually wrong?” The next morning, the routine repeats itself. Wake up. Get ready. Meet people. Laugh again.

Back to being “the fun one.”

And honestly, I have become so used to it that I no longer know where the act ends and where I begin. Every time someone asks, “Are you okay?” I answer too quickly: “Yeah, obviously.” It feels automatic, as though I do not even give myself a second to think about it.

Maybe I am a little afraid of what I might realise if I do. But sometimes I get tired.

Tired of always being okay. Tired of pretending I have everything figured out.

Tired of laughing when I do not even feel like smiling.

And the strangest part?
I am not always sad. I am not always struggling. There are genuinely good days—really good ones. Moments in class, random hostel conversations, and silly jokes that suddenly make everything feel okay again. But the difficult feelings do not disappear because of that.

They remain quietly somewhere in the background. I guess that is what growing up in college feels like—being surrounded by people all the time, yet still trying to figure yourself out on your own. I am still learning. Maybe one day I will stop hiding behind laughter all the time. Maybe I will learn how to sit in silence without feeling as though I am falling apart. Maybe I will answer honestly when someone asks how I am.

But for now, if you see me laughing a little too much in the corridors, in class, or in the hostel, just know that it is not always because something is funny.

Sometimes, it is simply because being “the happy one” feels easier than explaining why you are not.
